

The widespread use of the internet has given people access to information on a level never experienced before. How does this increase in the availability of information influence life in today's world?

Internet access has broadened people's information. We can hear this sentence in almost every discussion revolving around this new achievement of human civilization. In my opinion, we can encounter this idea from two different points of view as I explain below:

On the one hand, this is fair enough if we refer to the very ability of access which is gained by the internet nowadays. There are many websites offering the-an array of topics from cooking to abstractive philosophical content. In my experience as a researcher, the internet has have empowered me to read a dozen books and articles by just some-a few clicks where-were. I to do this along-during days without it. Or people could be updated in some-a second after many events. For example, I can remember the day I read a news item about Thai coupe, before one of my Thai friends get-got informed.

On the other hand, there is really a troublesome criticize-criticism about information that the internet can offer people around the world. Apart from the accuracy of information, like those untrueth matters about famous people's death or wedding which are notable here, there are two main problems with it. First of all, in the political aspect people are being played with information storm throw-through popular sources almost serving as propaganda pressings or yellow magazines which is-are simply recognizable in-on political occasions. Secondly, we can ask a simple question: does-is a bunch of information considered ed to be knowledge? In terms of science, information needs s to be processed to be converted to knowledge. Philosophically, the human mind could not stand simply before the storm of information. It means, neither masses of people nor elites can absorb the plenty of data and comprehend them without spending a meaningful time to cluster and analysis them. Now you answer, does the internet as a mediuma share this demand?

To sum up, there are a lot to say about the spread of internet affection on human-life but it is not possible to judge roughly about the quality of it determinately. Maybe, it is-servingserves as a double-sword to us as I explained. Finally, I should say all depends on individuals. There are many opportunities to enjoy-get-utilized thanks to this new gained-achievement, or we can be being played.