Prison is the common way in most countries to solve the problem of crime. However, a more effective solution is to provide people with a better education.
Do you agree or disagree?

Sending criminals ~~in~~ to prisons has been a handy method~~s~~ for many years to keep these people from the rest of society and decreasing the rate of crime. Although this way ~~have~~ has been a success to some extent, we should solve it by one fundamental means.

Primarily, it seems that the main reason for ~~commitment~~ commission of crime is ~~the~~ lack of awareness which an individual has about ~~their~~ his world around ~~world~~. This ignorance directs a person to do some actions that are not acceptable in society and usually banned. Now when we try to increase general knowledge of people, we could steer them to be compatible members in our communities. One of the early step~~s~~ to educate an individual begin~~s~~ from families. If parents who raise a child endeavour to teach essentially moral principles, this child can show reasonable reactions in facing ups and downs.

Secondly, by increasing the number of educated people in society, we would face less crime according to many researches. The rate of crimes is usually lower in educated communities ~~in~~ compare~~d~~ with others and this fact encourages governors and us to give more privileges to the development of the education system and persuade young people to continue their education. Not only does a ~~The~~ higher level of education ~~not only do~~ decrease the unemployment rate but also increase~~s~~ incomes through the middle class.

In conclusion, while it would seem that we still require prisons as the only way to deal with some offenders and some exceptionally anarchistic members of society, ~~this~~ it is education that finally aids us in being~~to be a~~ safe and secure.
