

Nowadays families move to different countries for work. Some people think it has a negative effect on children, while others disagree.

Discuss both views and give your opinion.

Over the last decades individuals have become much more educated. That is why, they search for/seek ~~for~~ doing a professional job regardless of its location. In other words, some people move to a new city or even immigrate to a new country, hence a better job opportunity. Some researchers believe that these alterations may pose numerous detrimental effects on the under-aged generation, whilst, some others disagree. This essay will discuss these two idea.

Proponents, including me, opine that earning bigger sums of money, parents can raise their children in a higher qualified situation that leads them to making a better future. It means that if their new place were large and more equippedfacilitate, not only would children be nurtured in a civilized environment, but they also can draw benefits from facilities. Another notable problem that may hold the young generations back is associated with assimilation to the new society. From my point of view, through living in a new living place your mind will change spontaneously and it cannot cause any issue for them.

On the other hand, opponents assume that these changes are considered a culture shocked. The more stress in life, the more disease they would have. For example, people in the brain development stage are faced with huge numbers of challenging situations and they are not capable of tackling further deleterious effects of a new reasonone.

By way of conclusion, I once again reaffirm my position regarding the issue of negative effects of movement on children and claim that the profits of living in a better condition cover its drawbacks, ; however, Parents should be much more sensitive regarding their loved ones in these periods of times.
