Successful sports professionals can earn a great deal more money than people in other important professions. Some people think this is fully justified while others think it is unfair.

Discuss both these views and give your own opinions.

Give reason for your answer and include any relevant examples from your own knowledge or experience.

Nowadays, as a result of constant media attention, sports professionals are obtaining more attention among people from all around the world. However, it is true that they do not contribute too much to a society such as scientists. This essay will provide discussion over both sides of this controversial issue.

Earning a great deal of money, sports professionals ~~is-are the~~ hard workers in their respective field. They spare no effort for the success of their own and their team. That ~~person-people~~ with real talent in the field are very few is the reason ~~of~~ why they are worth the deal. Even more, a player relatively has a short career and they have to deal with massive competition in this period. In addition, the pressure of media is intense in their lives, hence their little privacy out of the spotlight. All of these factors may justify result in their huge reward.

On the flip side, a majority of people feels this reality is an injustice. They argue that super salaries given to athletics are unfair. Furthermore, when they compare the income of rewarded scientists with football players, the result is dreadful. Not only do media show less interest in focusing on their-the former's work, but also people tend to ignore their achievements. Admittedly, life would be difficult without doctors, professors and other professionals.

All in all, personally I believe that the amount of money such sports starts make is justified/acceptable and they deserve such an income. Talents must be paid ~~with~~ huge amounts of money. Nonetheless, every individual should ~~realize-value~~ people who provide a vital service to communities.
