Successful sports professionals can earn a great deal more money than people in other important professions. Some people think this is fully justified while others think it is unfair.

Discuss both these views and give your own opinion.

Being a sport star is the dream of many juveniles in the world. Clearly, they are very popular, their work is lovely for many sport fans and their best ones earn a lot of money every year. Simultaneously, many other who think that these professionals are getting out of their lines by being paid too much at an exorbitant price, tend to bring them under their spotlights.

Firstly, the work pressure on these stars is undeniable, especially if they are playing at national games. Being watched/scrutinizedunder the eyesight of by dozens of people who hope and pray for their success, will put a great amount of responsibility and obsessiveness on them. Therefore, many people love them, admire them and believe they deserve to have a high level of salary. Secondly, their career's duration is generally no more than 15 years which is much less than others, so they have to save for their premature retirement.

On the other hand, commonly after exhibiting a poor performance by national super stars, critics arise and start to complain about inequality between celebrities and other people who work hard days and nights to keep up their lives. But the question is what has made them so fussy about our young loved ones?

I believe not only do these top-of-the-line professionals deserve to earn a lot as they are noble and talented individuals who are sifted from all over the nation, but also we should pay attention to many other job fields which may do not have any celebrities at the moment, but we should try to extract a specific famous role model for every field, so that everyone can see an achievable prospect in their own career.
