Which of the parents is more involved in raising children?

I agree with the view that both parents are essential in kids' growing up and their educations. But the key question is which of the parents is more effective and critical: mother or father?

However, it is true that it is the father's main responsibility to affording provide for his family. On the other hand, he probably spends much time out of the house. Therefore, people may usually think it's the mother's obligation to shape children's behavior. In contrast, recent studies have been done in UCAL which reveal the importance of father's role in kids' personality and treatment.

According to Dr. Johnston and his team on at the university, in spite of this fact that kids may spend much more time with their mother, they do not think about her as an example /role model. Children usually play or discuss talk with their moms, than dads in comparison with their male counterpart and kids are more relaxed with their mothers.

On the other hand, father has more serious reputation image for his kids and may be an example for children's path in future. Furthermore, the research shows that children less than 3 years old are more emotionally depended dependent to on their mothers.

In conclusion, I think it may be the fathers' critical role in children's nurturing treating and their personality. Also mothers' effects influence cannot be neglected especially on small kids.
