

Nowadays, social causes of increase in marriage age and delay in bringing a child had led to an age gap between parents and children. This issue makes a challenging debate among the fans of tradition and modernity. Although, the great difference in parents and children age may have some benefits, I believe it should not exceed 30 years.

Undoubtedly, children who have been born in a family with older parents could be satisfied with their wealthier and more comfortable lives because their parents had sufficient time to earn money. In addition, most of these parents have achieved success in their children in career and education which can affect their children's training and inspiration toward life. The parents' social situation can inspire their children in order to build their own successful future without feeling any financial shortage. They could achieve their goals and whatever they want more easily. But the mentioned materialistic achievement is not sufficient as children have more significant emotional desires in their life that is often faded in families with older parents. In this case children not only live alone their childhood, but also should take care of their parents as they grow up.

On the other hand, having young parents can bring more energy and pleasure to the children's lives. The lower difference in age of parents with the children causes more patience in parents' behavior due to not being separated thoroughly of their childhood and not being involved in the troubles. For instance, young parents would forgive their children's mistakes easier and encourage them for their tiny successes. Moreover, physical abilities of young parents assist them to play with children and to take them to parks and etc.

In general, I think that children with lower age difference with their parents could experience a happier life compared to those of older parents and this happiness is the need of each child rather than money.
