~~Ascending-decreasing the~~ demand to find out the natural behavior and attitude ~~pf-of~~ people has become a significant factor in many diversified sectors of ~~the~~ society. This significance is highly correlated with the fact that it could support installer of these devices ~~in~~ investigat~~inge~~ their goals in the crowd of public. There are tons of hot debate~~se~~ on ~~the~~ both sides of this which I would like to dig in more details. ~~(not relevant to the topic)~~

On one side, some believe that it help us find out many unconscious decisions made by people in several occasions in their lives. Just suppose that you discuss an issue with a friend while frequently followed by one other topic without your deliberation, and there is ~~a-some~~ smart software ~~that~~ could intelligently realize this interconnection, sending you a pop up notification to your email an offer based on this knowledge that if a person has an interest in two issues, ~~he~~ may be keen on ~~one-the~~ other issue too. It may be obvious that this procedure may be not only surprising but also responsive to some real demand of your~~s~~, as it maintain~~s~~ in business journals studying swarm behavior of people.

On the other hand, although these ~~minings-curiosity/inquisition~~ in people's privacy could be useful, it could put them in ~~discomfort-an uncomfortable~~ situation, hence their declination against these technologies. Assured, ~~being been~~ under inspection, people become stressed and do not ~~let them~~ feel free to carry out their normal affairs.

In conclusion, being under observation and control may be useful in some instances but in more general view it could not ~~overweigh-outweigh~~ its downsides which could results in public feeling bewildered and perplexed.
