

Nowadays, people move from one country to another for work. Some people think children of these families suffer because of this, while others think it is helpful for them.

Discuss both views and give your opinion.

Nowadays, countries are closer to each other than a decade ago.

Technology particularly the internet is the best device to perceive what is happening beyond the borders right now. These facilities enhance the immigration tendency especially for working. Some countries which have less young labor, jobholders hire foreigners in order to inject a fresh labor force into their vessels.

Economic and social conditions are the reasons for a person to leave his country. Unemployment can exacerbate this problem. Immigration might be positive because the new destination could have numerous opportunities which leads to promotion and also it may guarantee gaining wealth. Besides, you can meet a new country with a new culture and expand the worldview with valuable experiences. Some immigrants say not only does our next generation live in better conditions s but also they must do not have to face their parents' problems.

On the other hand, new life in a new area causes some problems such as homesickness which has many aspects and one of them one of which is differences between cultures, so it can be harmful especially for children. For instance, kids are going to play with their counterparts in a park but they are alien and they can't cannot communicate with other kids because initially, they maybe-don't may not know the language.

In conclusion, I guess if going abroad is done legally considering its problems it will be beneficial. Anyway, this decision depends on immigrants but these days most of people are trying to find a glittery way for a brilliant future and maybe immigration is that.
