

Nowadays, people move from one country to another for work. Some people think children of these families suffer because of this, while others think it is helpful for them. Discuss both views and give your opinion.

Immigration is always recognized as a controversial issue due to having both benefits and drawbacks. Making such an essential decision affects not only parents' lives but also children's. However, I believe that children could profit much more than their parents if they were taken to ~~the~~ destination country while they are very young.

Experiencing a novel environment seems attractive to children for their ability of adaptation. The younger children immigrate, the more they can acclimate themselves to the new conditions. The main reason of this pertains to children's behaviors such as being risky and forgetful which enables them to alleviate their fear of facing a new world. On the other hand, in this case a better education is provided for children. Besides, they could easily expand their relationships, find friends and improve their new language as a result. However, the pace ~~existed-existing in~~ before and after situations of their life, contributes to some troubles.

Despite the numerous advantages of foreign countries as the new home for children, several aspects may bother them. Firstly, they will recognize their parents' stress and embarrassment at home for example in seeking an occupation which causes a negative impact on them. Secondly, being different from their friends in appearance, religion and even the level of family prosperity, ~~i~~ may lead to their self-confidence reduction as they grow up.

In a nutshell, the benefits of moving to another country, outweight the drawbacks, particularly for children because of their easy-going lifestyle. Therefore, parents make this choice for creating a better future for their children, albeit unpreferablyreluctantly.
