

In some countries, many people do not have enough money to access the Internet. Should governments be responsible for ensuring that everyone can get access to the Internet?

Nowadays, having access to the Internet is one of the essential facilities ~~in~~ all over the world. During the last two decades the Internet has grown rapidly worldwide and today it ~~becomes~~ ~~has~~ ~~become~~ a necessity which plays a remarkable role in everyone's life. Today, not only are most of the businesses and ~~carriers~~ ~~careers~~ tied to the Internet but also without it lots of job opportunities face serious difficulties and risks which may lead to bankruptcy of massive small or big businesses.

However, in many countries the internet is not affordable for many people as far as it has even ~~becomes~~ a luxury ~~item~~ in their lives. In this situation, it is the government's duty to make a plan and reduce the ~~Internet's~~ costs to avoid any ~~inconvenience~~ ~~inconvenient~~ situation for people. Unfortunately, ~~in~~ some countries, the government considers the Internet ~~as~~ a threat to their policy. Because of their political views, they try to manipulate accessing to the massive information that people can attain by the Internet.

I would argue that, the Internet is a way to enhance the quality of our lives, ~~without it~~ we can live but we may lag behind ~~from~~ the developed countries. Today, the Internet is a route to knowledge. We cannot compare the influence of studying loads of books to the knowledge that we can access with the Internet much easier and faster in order to improve our rudimentary knowledge.

In conclusion, the Internet is a necessity and the governments should provide it free of charge for everyone without being worried about the possible negative outcomes of it. Access to the Internet is a right, so it is the governments' responsibility to assure everyone by using the Internet freely in addition to informing them how to use it properly to reduce the possible misuses.