

Some people think that parents should teach children how to be good members of society. Others, however, believe that school is the place to learn this.

Discuss both these views and give your own opinion?

In today's world, being a decent member of ~~the~~ society is an important value that could not be eliminated from anyone's life. While a group of people believes that it is the responsibility of parents ~~guiding to guide~~ their children to become valuable people in ~~the~~ society, some ~~people~~ argue that schools have more power to ~~effect on~~ affect/influence children's behavior and character ~~istic~~. Before drawing any conclusion, I'm going to discuss both sides.

It is true that education starts at home and every child's personality is shaped at early ages, and parents as the first role models have a significant role in this area. Parents are the ones who convey values such as (respect and integrity) being respectful and honest to their youth through their own behavior. For instance, if a parent prepares food for poor people, the child cares more about other people in the future. In addition, since parents pay more attention to their children's s behavior, it is easy for them to identify unacceptable ones and find a way to correct them.

On the other hand, children spend a great amount of time at schools and therefore this environment can be considered ~~as~~ one of the best places to teach children discipline, teamwork, and interpersonal skills. As a practical example, schools can organize activities such as cleaning the nearest park in the neighborhood. In fact, as parents have to work long hours and could not spend sufficient time with their children, schools play a golden-special role in this situation.

In conclusion, both points of views ~~s~~ have their own dispute, while parents have a significant role in raising their children, the role of schools cannot be disregarded, as a result, I believe both should work together to ~~make-rear~~ a decent child ~~a decent one~~ who could have a positive influence in ~~the~~ society/the community.