

Sanaz Namdar

Topic:

The quality of life in some big cities is getting worse. What is the main cause of this what solution can you suggest?

These days, some major cities behold a huge amount of life benchmark degradation. Although having some compelling justification, this phenomenon can be tackled by taking some applicable measures.

The deterioration of living standards in some metropolises has a wide spectrum of grounds. First and foremost, modern lifestyle is putting an unprecedented strain on the Earth's ecosystem. Accordingly, it causes various kinds of pollution such as air, water, and noise ~~pollution~~. ~~The~~ air pollution is a matter of concern to inhabitants of large cities now that air quality is at an alarming rate in these densely populated areas. Secondly, the larger the cities are, the higher the level of criminality they generally experience. Consequently, citizens are living under constant fear and threats in addition to feeling unsecured insecure. These environmental and criminal issues not only threaten city dwellers' health physically but also have some irreversible long-lasting dire effects on our spirits.

On the other hand, there are some steps recommended to tackling tackle the worsening ~~of~~ urban lifestyles. Pollution-wise, the cure has been declared by means of renewable energies, as opposed to fossil fuel. Furthermore, the government can introduce green taxes to finance their environmental initiatives such as conservative-conservationist programs. However, these rules may not be enforced easily in advance, but having experienced their merits, citizens succumb to them. Dealing with crimes is far more sophisticated. The legislature part of the government should pass relevant rules. Simultaneously, the judiciary part should supervise citizens to obey them otherwise some strict punishment could be taken. On the other hand, some educational programs s should be considered to encourage people to conforming to approval-approved laws in order to reduce the criminality rate in society.

In conclusion, for the above mentioned reasons including ecological and criminal issues, the reduction of life quality occurs in some overcrowded areas. These acute difficulties cannot be insurmountable, provided that some preventing/preventative measures are taken by the government or individuals.