

In many places, new homes are needed, but the only space available for building them is in the countryside. Some people believe it is more important to protect the countryside and not build new homes there.

Today, irrespective of the country, many cities struggle with escalated population, hence the lack of accommodation issues. Therefore, in many regions, in order to lack of a vacant lot to build a house, people have to migrate to countryside and build their house there in lieu of the city, thereby destroying natural environment. This destructive phenomenon has its opposers who say that it can endanger our future lives.

On the one hand, many argue that the housing can be quoted as one of the basic human needs which can be categorized as safety in Maslow's hierarchy of needs. Therefore, it is for governments to provide citizens with safe accommodation, and one of the areas where can construct a building is countryside. They think that although the protection of nature is one of the officials' responsibilities, the preparation of the conditions of having a place to live is more crucial than that. Thus, people can use country to build their buildings. However, it should happen under some governmental observations and with a proper environmental protection plan to attain the both approaches.

On the other hand, occupying the countryside has been cited as the one of the main culprits of today's environmental issues. The opponents of this harmful phenomenon believe that not only will damaging the environment endanger both the Earth and humankind's future, but also it can threaten animals and people's lives. Additionally, in some cases it can cause extinction to some animal species. When some reside in countryside, road construction for reaching other areas is inevitable, so it damages the occupied region and subsequently has deleterious effects on a vast territory.

Consequently, whilst preparation of accommodation is a critically crucial need of individuals, preservation of nature seems to be more important since destroying it will threaten the whole human beings not a specific group needing home.