

- Countries are becoming more and more similar because people are able to buy the same products anywhere in the world.

Do you think this is a positive or negative development?

It is believed that countries are becoming similar in terms of products availability and globalization. I believe that this phenomenon is detrimental in some ways and in the other way it can have positive aspect as well.

Countries history, traditions, handicrafts, traditional foods are unique to each region and country. One of the tourism attractions is especial foods and products of each country. To make all products of regions available everywhere in the world can damage tourism industry. In addition, handicrafts being made by local people provides employment and job opportunities for them which globalization of products can damage the opportunities.

On the other hand, finding any product from any region everywhere in the globe can be positive and convenient point for immigrants and foreigners in their destination country. Previously it was a concern for immigrants to find a special product from their homeland in another county, but nowadays availability of handicrafts or traditional foods made life more convenient for them.

In conclusion, looking at the fact that there is similarity of countries due to the ability to buy anything anywhere in the world can be both positive and negative from two different perspective. Being able to purchase any product anywhere in the world can damage the tourism industry, employment of local people and at the same time can be positive to give the opportunity to purchase any necessary goods even in a country other than their homeland.
