

Some people think the government should pay for healthcare and education, but other people claim that it is the individual's responsibility.

Nowadays, most governments pay for healthcare and training.

Some individuals argue the government should pay on buildings and roads. Although healthcare is an important concern, the government should move down it in its priority list.

Some people claim the government should fully cover the expenditure of healthcare and education. A person who faces with a hard decease should only tolerate the pain of decease not the pain of impecuniosity. The government should play a pioneering role in healing the wounds by funding and developing insurances in order to appease the pains. In addition, education is an important part of life. The government should pay attention to the training system. In other words, it should provide the necessary equipment especially for clever but poor students to continue their education. These smart pupils are the future generation who will become a responsible in the community.

On the other hand, some individuals believe that healthcare and training should be paid by own people. In this case, not only they understand what they do, but also they pay attention to their healthcare. If they are checked by the doctors periodically, they would not have to pay the medicines. Therefore, it is their fault. Moreover, the government should not pay for education because it is an optional concern. Everyone has right to either study or not.

In conclusion, the government should manage its budget. I personally opine it should pay for healthcare and education. The patients need to be assisted. Besides, education should be funded lest the smart pupils become disappointed.
