

Some people believe that entertainers (e.g. film stars, pop musicians or sports stars) are paid too much money. Do you agree or disagree? Which other types of jobs should be highly paid?

In almost every part of the globe celebrated artists and sportsperson are paid more than others. This has become the subject of a heated debate in different levels of societies. Opponents of such high pays argue these controversial payments can lead to an unbridgeable gap between people. This short essay elaborates my view points on this contentious topic.

I maintain that the extortionately expensive professionals regardless of their profession are, in fact, harvesting what they planted years ago, and since they are not paid from governmental budget, applying any kind of restriction does not seem reasonable. This it is, in fact, their highly demanded competence that makes large companies sign exorbitant contracts with them. That well- established sports clubs such as Estaghlal or legendary entertainment companies like Warner Bros make a substantial profit from superstars is a given. Additionally, the governments are by and large rewarded with a handsome amount of profit coming from the direct tax of fruitful contracts of celebrities.

Besides the artists and sportspersons I hold the idea that teachers especially those involved in teaching the elementary students must be paid more than usual. Persevered and patience, teachers who are not paid appropriately in almost all parts of the world must be praised financially for their contribution for the good of the community. I believe that not only do teachers have to be paid more than usual, but they are also needed to be given special social privileges

By way of conclusion, Once again I reaffirm my position that celebrities must not face any limitation regarding their income. In other words, they can be paid as much as their sponsors choose to pay, and no legislation seems required to limit their revenue. Admittedly, only when all gifted people are free to explore their talent, can we expect a society flourishes in all aspects.

This One