

Young people in the modern world seem to have more power and influence than any previous young generations.

Why is this the case?

What impact does this have on the relationship between old and young people?

Due to the high pace of technological progress during recent decades, people's attitude toward life has changed. This situation leads to the fact that youths have become significantly more effective and have more power(will) than their previous generations. This short essay will elaborate on the causes of this issue, and numerous effects of it on the relationship between elderly individuals and young generations.

First and foremost, using technological devices for doing their work, young individuals tend to find answers of to their questions and solutions of for their difficulties through browsing the net, thereby reducing their dependency on their parents. Not only do old people not have enough information as to the new ways of living, but they also consider new instruments unusual. Further and even more importantly, in the past, children used to assume their fathers and mothers role models for them, and looked up to them in different situations. As opposed to now, when youths assert them out-of-date. Last but not least is associated with their life style. For instance, over several decades ago, members of the public mostly worked in fields such as keeping animals and planting to name just a few. By contrast, nowadays most of them are engaged in industrial factories and have a completely different job which is roughly unknown for their parents.

Considering the effects of this phenomenon on the relationship between old and lower aged individuals, the aforementioned differences place a wide gap among them meaning that no longer do young people assume the older ones wise and with effective experience. What is more, this assumption is to the detriment of the both. In this way, they have become relatively arrogant and cannot take advantages from of old people's experience.

On the whole, despite some young individuals' opinions in regard to their more awareness about the environment and other issues, I, personally, believe that older generations are aware of an array of facts which are unknown by youths and not achievable through new devices as well.
