

Some people argue that it is more important to have an enjoyable job than to earn a lot of money. Others disagree and think that a good salary leads to a better life.

People's life is inextricably bound up with the job. They have to work to earn money for their living costs. While some people believe that money brings about a good life and hence everybody should take a high-paid job, others subscribe to a view that there is more to life than just money.

Some people believe that money plays a pivotal role in life. Without a good salary, they would not be able to provide anything they want such as medicine. Moreover, living costs are highly increasing and due to its instability it is better to have a high salary in comparison with an enjoyable job. From my point of view, however, well-paid job opportunities are rare and seldom does every body find a good job. In addition, these kind of jobs are competitive and provided that they are rejected, they will be upset.

On the other hand, some people share the view that feeling happy is much more vital than money. They do believe in the fact that life is defined as enjoyment and it is not of high important how much income they earn. Everybody can live with a minimum salary and job satisfaction in terms of enjoying it, plays a key role in good living. In my opinion, this is a positive attitude to a better life, even though the importance of money in life is undeniable.

In conclusion, I have to say that although money is of great value, having an enjoyable job is beneficial to the good of family and in the first step people should seek jobs which they love.

Barely does a person enjoy his life without having enjoyable work.
