

Job satisfaction is far less important than job security in the modern workplace. How far do you agree or disagree with this statement?

There is no doubt that job satisfaction profoundly affects the moral of people and consequently the quality of social and family life. Dissatisfaction with the workplace is drawn to the home and the community. Therefore, it will have very devastating effects on the society. On the other hand, having no job security, and losing the job has its own problems and affects.

It is obvious that all people intend to have a both satisfying and secure job, but sometimes they don't have any option. For example, they have to tolerate the work which they don't like at all. Furthermore, long work hours or not desirable atmosphere. On top of all, even there is no way unless having a career that is irrelevant to the field of study, abilities, skills, interest and their social position.

Regarding all of these, I severely disagree with this statement that job satisfaction is far less important than job security in the modern workplace. Not only is this issue a feature of modern society or its necessity, but it also is the sign of a serious problem.

From my perspective, we should not accept this compulsion as a fact, contrary we should look at it as a problem and seek a solution. According to the experts, an important cause leading to preferring job security instead of job satisfaction is the unstable economic condition of a country. In this situation, fear of being unemployed, and having no income are the most important reasons of bearing the unpleasant job. Another factor is not being enough confident and brave to make a change and leave the irritating work.

To sum up, for having a healthy and happy society, both people and government are in account of changing the circumstance so that nobody has to choose between job security and job satisfacation.
