

Some people believe it is important to give gifts and presents to friends and family to show that we care about them. Others think that there are better ways to show affection to them.

Discuss both the views and give your own opinion.

For a long time, gift giving has been a sign for expression of people's feeling and nowadays people still spend their money for it. However, some believe that we can use inexpensive ways for showing our love and thanks. This essay briefly explains both ~~of~~ views and tries to reach a general conclusion.

There are many people who prefer to show their intimacy by giving gifts to others and they argue that giving a gift represents generosity and attention of givers. They maintain when we spend our time and money for finding and buying ~~a~~-presents ~~it~~-means that the receivers/recipients are so important for us and they deserve love and kindness. Moreover, a gift is a tangible object that can be seen and touched for many and for many years, it would be a reminder of an unforgettable day, each time we look at it.

On the other hand, it seems that there are some other ways ~~for~~to manifest our feeling about others rather than giving a physical gift, albeit with more skill in social interaction roles. We can show our devotion by listening to people, anticipate their needs, making time or even the hug and touch. Sometimes s spending an hour with a friends and being a shoulder to cry on is much more effective than a present. In addition, these days giving a gift turns to an easy task which everyone can do ~~it~~ just by-with access to the internet. Also, -as-well-as some ~~enormous-major~~ companies abuse ~~of~~ our tendency to give a present to sell more and more.

In conclusion, although it appears that we can manage our relations with others through some social skills, I personally believe that no matter how ~~much-master~~ we are ~~master~~ in social interactions, we still require a mixture of a gift in an attractive wrapping and a hug.