

Some people claim that not enough of the waste from homes is recycled. They say that the only way to increase recycling is for governments to make it a legal requirement.

To what extent do you think laws are needed to make people recycle more of their waste?

There are some people in society who agree that we are not use using enough of the wastes which are is made by our own hands. From by the word "use" I mean make them useful again or recycling .However, they believe that governments should make that requirement legal.

In from my perspective , putting a recycling law would be just a transient solution and people will would see that as a punishment because they have to separate all kinds of wastes and that would be too much work for today's busy people .Not only do they see this as a punishment but also they will see that as a community service like they commit a crime.

However , I believe that political people politicians can do more than just introducing a law . They can put some education in schools or even between every single person of the society . Homeowners could be informed by agents (who are hired by the government) about how household wastes can make create bad effects on the environment . Another tactic that governments should use would be create stricter laws against companies which are making the packing for household products . Eventually , money could also be used to improve recycling facilities and systems.

In conclusion , maybe we do not need an actual recycling law for households but there should be enough education for every person and sufficient system for the government .
