

In many countries these days, the number of people continuing their education after school has increased, and the range of courses available at universities and colleges has also increased.

Education ~~would be~~ may not be very important, but it is a good thing. People, who are going to develop their process of their education in a population society on of a country, will be much positive impacts for themselves and others in many terms. Occasionally, they do that after their school. By their beliefs, it's the way for success and finding better jobs, which would make their parents proud of them. In many societies, having high academic educational certificate is valuable, even if you are not successful or have any interest in that field. I think it would be a negative influence and will be just a showoff.

On the other hand, many believes, having academic education or continuing it is not important. It may be consider by many reasons like the economic situation or lack of scholarship, so they would rather ~~to~~ get a job during some courses and ~~don't not wasting waste~~ their energy and time for academics. Actually, it is a positive item for this view. ~~B~~ b because, you will have better effect on a country and help ~~to~~ developing it increasingly.

To sum up, I think both sides ~~have are~~ right. It is better to have an academic education and also ~~can be able to~~ work by some courses. Many have succeeded without even knowing how to write or read or have an academic degree. These groups of people are like Zakariaye Razi, Abu ali Sina, Thomas Edison, Alexander Graham ~~bell~~ Bell and ~~etc.~~ other figures. A developed country ~~have has~~ to have also an ~~educational~~ educated farmer ~~from~~ with at least minimum general information.