

Many museums and historical sites are mostly visited by foreign tourists, but not local people. Why do you think it happens? What can be done to attract local visitors to these sites?

Regrettably, a vast majority of the populace are not attracted to their regional historical places and museums. In the light of this, authorities in many parts of the world are looking to find the reasons alongside the practical solutions to encourage people from different social strata to visit such a priceless areas. The following lines elaborate on this critically important topic.

These days, it is not that ~~must~~ weird for most museums and historical places to be visited by foreigners and not local people. Perhaps, one of the main reasons behind the fact that the local people are not so interested ~~to-in~~ such places lies in easy accessibility to those invaluable places. In other words, while many travel to visit a museum in even another continent, ~~others~~ procrastinate visiting a historical area in ~~his-their~~ area reasoning that ~~he-they~~ still ~~has-have~~ more important duties than visiting a historical place inside ~~his-their~~ territory.

To encourage locals from all walks of life to visit their historical areas and museums authorities have to ~~rise-raise~~ people's awareness. That is to say, only if individuals recognize the importance of visiting those areas, can we expect to ~~have-a~~ live in a better society. That the history is the only true teacher is an indisputable fact. Tired of ~~the~~ hectic pace of life in this day and age, ordinary people are not aware of the real significance of visiting such immeasurable worth ~~while~~ areas.

To cut a long story short, I maintain that it is incumbent upon both the government and ~~the~~ elite of societies to improve ~~the~~ public awareness regarding the value of visiting those places. I also hold the idea that not only is visiting historical sites of paramount importance from ~~a~~ cultural point of view, but it also can help society to experience a widely acceptable cash flow (~~due to the~~)/~~because of the~~ money people spend within their borders.
