

As computers are being used more and more in education, there will be soon no role for teachers in the classroom. Do you agree or disagree.

The advent of computers has revolutionized the way we are living. This phenomenon has sparked a heated debate among researchers some of whom assume that due to this alteration, no longer do we need the presence of teachers at schools. It means that students are capable of learning an array of subjects through online systems. I, personally, assert that not only is the duty of teachers not just allotted to transferring scientific issues, but they also have to teach students how they should behave in society. That is why I disagree with the given idea.

First and foremost, in a society where children study at home and undependent of schools' teachers, they will be isolated. The case in point is some offspring spending most of their time at their room and tends not to interact with others. These people will have numerous difficulties in the future. For example, these isolated members of the public can not develop a prosperous future at the workplace where they should communicate with their colleagues. Further and even more importantly is associated with the fact that nowadays teachers teach different scientific concepts and then learners can do homework or carry out projects based on what they acquire, thus without the contribution of teachers/ the guide/leaders they are not able to learn basic facts.

On the other hand, proponents concur that the personality of under-aged members of the public is completely different from those of their counterparts in the past meaning that they prefer to educate through their gadgets which is of great benefit for them. The pivotal reason is that in this way they should not waste their time travellinggoing to school. In addition, they will have more concentration at what they study by themselves.

On the whole, I once again reaffirm my position regarding the detrimental effects of studying via technological devices. I believe that with teachers in addition to/besides learning lessons, children get familiar with numerous effective skills which are completely necessary for their future.
