

In the past, many people had skills such as making their own clothes and doing repairs to things in the house. In many countries, nowadays, skills like these are disappearing. Why do you think this change is happening? How far is this situation true in your country?

From the beginning of the human beings' life on the earth, they have always had to struggle with their needs and issues and find proper solutions for them by themselves. Therefore, during stone and metal ages, making some tools or doing tasks for meeting human needs occurred by individuals or some groups of them. In the ancient times, people were required to be educated by their ancestors a lot of skills to live a normal life and also to be able to survive. However, today, in the age of technology and modernized life there is no requiring need to be being skilled in many necessary fields for living.

Through this hectic lifestyle which every individual has to have experience, there is no time left to do some trivial chores that are wasting time. Clearly, in the modernized and industrialized civilization, all tasks have are divided to among some professionals who have full skills in a specific career. Accordingly, all work are is done professionally and no one has to learn various skills such as, sewing, plumping plumbing, carpeting, carpentering, painting, electrical work, because in the modern society all tasks are completed by some experts. Although the mentioned situation is called the period of thrived thriving human civilization, sometimes, not having primary skills causes people to troubles. The simple example is that imagining a situation in a serious meeting and one of the members of the meeting has an issue with their clothes like tearing. Knowing about how to fix their clothes by themselves can assist them a lot.

Despite the modernized and computerized new humans' lifestyle, there are some countries and traditional families which who are almost belong to the East or Middle East, to urge their children to learn some conventional skills, for instance, for girls learning how to sew or perhaps for boys learning how to fix or repair some equipment for their future is compulsory. Iran as my country is the best example of this kind of country.

To sum up all the statements above, I have to say that a pale learning conventional skill is not an admirable fact. Even if some of the skills are simple, there they are extremely important when an urgent occasion happens should the occasion rise. In addition, it is crystal clear that new generations do not desire to follow their ancestors in the way of living.
