

Agree Disagree

Playing computer games is a waste of time. Children should not be allowed to play them.

Living in the world of binary codes which ~~are~~is about to provide human beings with an alternate reality, it will be an obviously poor understanding of our living-world to see computer games as a total waste of time. Although it has its undeniable ~~damages~~s to us especially to our children, with a little of attempts to breed some abilities like time management in ourselves and our children, we can enjoy this so functional an invention of humans.

As a matter of fact, every age has its own characteristics requiring its respective humans to get acquainted with and playing, for a kid, can be cited as the most effective tool in this way. In ~~the~~ agricultural one, taking as an example, people should have been physically more strong or known the instruments needed to be used in agriculture like shovels and picks. Consequently, they would be accessible in their living places even for their children in that no sooner a child ~~has~~had come into the world than he/she encountered that agricultural age and the presence of its instruments. Simply put, this day and age has its own attributes too like computers. It seems oddly enough and even impossible to keep our children away from them as an agricultural kid from playing with a shovel. Moreover, being exposed to these features, not only do children can develop their connection to the real world, but also they can become professionally familiarized with the world they should live in so that they have more opportunities in future to flourish.

The other side of the coin, of course, ushers us to some ~~unwilling-unintended~~ consequences of these games. Doubtlessly, the countless hours spending in just some inches from a floodlight on a seat will not be a healthy way for a kid to live. It ~~even~~ gets worse when it comes to those psychological effects which can render poor children dissociable and irate and even incapable ~~to-of leave-leaving~~ the virtual world.

In a nutshell, children have the right to live their current world and enjoy its possibilities which can elevate their personalities provided ~~there is~~ some special ~~cares-~~oversight which protects them against being vulnerable to its damages.