TVs, newspapers, magazines, and other media pay too much attention to the personal lives of famous people such as public figures and celebrities.

Surrounded by countless types of media, people are spending a considerable piece of their sweet life ~~to absorb~~ absorbing the information and programs coming from these media which are seemingly dedicated more to narrate ~~some~~ personal lives of some particular individuals. ~~With~~ by watching the mainstream audiences of all sorts s of media around me struggling with these stories, doubtlessly, I go for the idea stated above.

Logically, there is a structural condition of our new capitalist world patronizing the idea. Although we have gained a lot through this attitude, the economy is writing our otherwise free life with its decisive power. Just consider the numerous magazines, mounted in front of stores; r rarely can you find a ~~copy~~ piece of a magazine which is not adorned with some hot figures of ~~the~~ society in-on its front page. Stopping by a kiosk, looking into what the costumers carry on their hand, easily you become able to assess the sales volume of different types of magazines. This is not an enigma to be solved; supply and demand. They can be of any kind or any socio-economic status. They just bloom in favor of benefit. Unfortunately, this is the role that the majority of people are playing unknowingly, in the whole economic cycle of this simple fact, to fill the pockets of those who are riding this market. The last one led to us understanding another sad psychological fact in current characteristics of humanity; laziness and running from the comprehension of mankind which renders us attracted to some superficial quotes ~~as~~ similar as-to gossips; the boring fifth husband of her, the story of their unbelievably divorce, the broken artificial nails of her on the scene because of a mysterious accident.

Experimentally, we can simply discern the world drowning by the massive presence of celebrities all over it. Only when you watch the world fairly, will you understand that the media is broadening its definition even to the walls of our town. Not only will you be imbibed with some daily broadcast ~~ed~~ story of those recognized people by TVs or newspapers, but also you will not be abounded in a single moment of your loneliness in your own town. They will accompany ~~your life~~ you into your bed, either a hot lovely girl advertising a meaningless unnecessary tool which ~~have~~ has changed her life as her white teeth spreading all over the frame telling us or an ostensibly ecstatic sophisticated man ~~have~~ has his hair carefully cut and oiled dreaming of a zesty future for our poor children and demanding our humorously precious vote.

In a nutshell, obviously, all sorts of media are over-focusing the story of some specific faces, following our new attitudes toward the world like that of the economic profit, and killing our precious time which could otherwise be spent on some more wisely elected material.
