Q : Movies and television have more negative effects than positive effects on the way young people behave. Agree or disagree?

Deciding whether movies and television have positive impacts on juveniles or not is considered a controversial debate. Some believe that television and films adversely affect young people's attitude in a bad way as opposed to people who frown upon this idea and believe in the positive effects of televisionthis medium. However, I am of the second idea and have two points in support of my view point.

To begin with, thanks to the film industry development which has made accessing movies and series much easier than the past and has made it a great opportunity for young people to approach gain great experiences through watching television. Not to mention its positive effects on young people's learning pattern. By effectively watching television and movies you can obtain new information from all around the globe. Watching television while relaxing is not only enjoyable but also an efficient way of unconscious learning. My own experience is a compelling example of this point. When I used to get ready for my English exam, watching television helped me improve my English in a wayways that nothing could compare it.

Secondly, most of the youngsters love picking their role models from movies and imitate their behaviors. The good news is that they tend to choose their role models among positive actors or actresses. To my mind, we should focus on the bright side of watching television and movies and trust our young children and let them decide about movies they want to watch due to the fact that every television program has something beneficial to teach them and by far this way of learning is more effective than other ways. For instance, spider man was my cousin's role model, although imitating his attitude sometimes might seem dangerous, he learned the value of helping the populace.

To cut a long story short, the aforementioned points and examples show s my positive position toward the effects of watching television and movies. Movies make young people to get familiar with our world and gain new information. We can count /cite movies role models and their advantageous influence on young people's behavior as another positive effect of watching movies and television which is why I perceived them as an eminenceeminent innovation.
