

Elnaz Shokrollahpour, [27.09.19 09:59]

[Forwarded from Elnaz Shokrollahpour]

Some people believe that to be successful at a sport you need a natural ability and others think that hard work and practice make you successful discuss both views and give your opinion.

It is generally believed that only people who are born with certain talent for sports will be successful. However, some people disagree with this view and believe that hard work and practice make players successful.

On one hand, many people believe that natural talent is needed for being successful at sports. It is true that people who have natural ability for sports can be successful with relatively less effort. If we consider the examples of great sportsperson, we can see most of them showed considerable talent in their fields in childhood.

On the other hand, some people believe that practice and perseverance make people perfect. Even if somebody is not born with exceptional talent, it is still possible for them to become successful through hard work. For instance, in some countries there are children who are trained from very young age specifically for certain sports so they can become olympic winners in future. In other words practice is the secret to success.

In conclusion, I believe that hard work beats talent when talent doesn't work hard which means having a certain talent will not necessarily result in great achievements. In order to become a successful sportsman constant practice and hard work are needed.