

Teachers are more influential than parents on children's intelligence and mentality? Agree or disagree?

There are variety of affecting factors on children's intellect and subjectivity which in my view parents and teachers are nuts and bolts in this case which is in the category of controversial debates.

First of all, not only does a child's personality develop from ~~its~~ childhood also a child is very much influenced by their parents which might be the languages, habits and traditional-traditions which actually are the base of the child's personality development. Moreover, parents come first as role models of children from ~~the~~ infancy which means children naturally learn how to react to certain circumstances by observing how their parents ~~how~~ interact and behave with-toward each other and other people. In addition, parents have a much more impact on children's growing up, as a child stays most of their time with them.

Secondly, although parents play a large role in cultivation of a child's social skills, children are taught by their teachers' intelligence and mental skills as well as fundamentals of mathematics and science which causes/bring about a huge development in terms of team working and joining ~~to~~ the more large society in them. As a matter of fact children spend their study periods along with teachers in schools and universities so their main living ideas will be formed ed in that-those years. Without a doubt, educators play sa significant role in motivation of adolescents to obtaining and storing-store vast amounts of information which results in increasing their self-confidant-confidence and improving social competencies which leads to boosting their mental well-being and intelligent-intelligence as teachers are the backbone of the education of juveniles.

To sum up, children learn intelligence and mentality from both parents and teachers so it is difficult to conclude ~~that~~ which one are-is more effectual when it comes to a child's development. Therefore, i believe that neither of these essential facts would ~~not~~ be able to do that lonely.