

Do you agree or disagree? Most businesspeople are motivated only by the desire for more money.

One of the most important motivations to have a job is definitely money. We all admit that its tempting power makes everybody trample on everything, especially in the modern world where there is a cut-throat competition among industries and people. I strongly believe that their first desire is money. In the following paragraphs, I will elaborate on my arguments.

The first and foremost thing that comes to mind is that many people hold that thriving businesses solely care about ~~solely~~ their profits. In fact, maximizing their interests, they should neglect some values such as humanity, and environmental issues. For instance, some companies like Zara and H&M exploit their employees in poor Asian ~~poor~~ countries. That is to say, not only do they pay them ten dollars per month, but they also do not provide a safe building for their workplace lest their costs increase. Therefore, a rise in their capital is opposed to humanity and justice.

Second, some fanatic people suggest that whenever a company shows regard for social or environmental matters, they are just deceiving people, thereby acquiring reputation. Besides, in my opinion, most of the businesses address an issue following people's reaction to that. In other words, despite their capital and credit, not all of them are in the vanguard of the positive changes. For instance, companies can have a massive impact on gender equality in various ways, namely gender gap payment. They, however, just maintain the pretense of dealing with this global issue.

Nevertheless, there are some companies which have been established to resolve some issues such as the disabled's problems, environmental protection, and women empowerment in poor countries. For example, there are many companies in Nepal and Bangladesh combining business and the desire for addressing social issues in terms of women empowerment.

To conclude, I opine that money is so deep a desire to set up a business such that it turns into greed over time. We as clients should be aware of their tricks to not be trapped in their advertisement resulting in their profits.
