

Some people say that music can bring people of different cultures and ages together.

To what extent do you agree or disagree with this opinion?

Many believe that Music is the most basic forms of communication~~s~~ between different ages and cultures. I completely concur with this statement~~.~~

Music trends tend to be generational, but there is something powerful about music genres and what creates solidarity across decades, age groups and even countries. Music can be particularly potent in bringing about closeness by releasing the hormone dopamine and age is not a subject to this natural phenomenon. For instance, whether it is a concert, festival or a street performance people relish the opportunity while those live performances vary based on culture, music genre or age group, they all have a common purpose of entertaining and connecting together.

Music both shapes and reflects society. Dancers follow its beat; protesters use it to find their voice. It can promote ideals like peace and unity but it can also prepare armies for battle. It is part of almost every important personal and collective moment. in a world of diversity~~,~~ where often values clash, music leaps across language barriers and unites people of quite different cultural backgrounds and it function as a universal language. Although music lacks communicative specificity in comparison with language, its power sometimes exceeds that of language in social, emotional and spiritual domains. In live contexts, moreover, music can communicate ~~to~~with greater numbers of individuals and over greater distances than language can.

In conclusion, music is a helpful tool in integrating cultures and generations.it prepares the ground for more interactions between different ages and cultures because it can create a great moment for individuals being to be happy and also be a universal language between different countries.
