There are benefits when someone tries to learn other languages. This is also claimed by many beliefs that everyone who wants to work or travel in other countries, needs to attend to this action, but others believe ~~not otherwise~~ and so am-do I.

These days, learning a foreign language is more popular in many countries more than ever. People who try to learn another tongue, are going to prepare for their aims or purposes such as travelling or working-in somewhere far away than-from their home. There is-are also many advantages during this processes. One of them is, the learners become smarter and sharper rather- than whom-thos who are monolingual. They have much more success to-in eliminate-eliminating misunderstanding or conflict through communication by many experts' beliefs.

On the other hand, Language and culture are intrinsically linked. Actually, it is impossible to understand a foreign culture without learning their language first. By learning a foreign language, we also get to enjoy the literature and music in that language. Of course, translations are available but they will never beat the original. For example, the Russian language has numerous classical novels written in it. While these novels have been translated to many languages, one has to learn Russian to be able to read the original.

Also, in this age of the internet, people who are fluent in a foreign language can find work as translators or interpreters within their country itself. They do not necessarily have to go abroad to use their knowledge of international languages.

To sum up, learning foreign languages needs to be aimed in other purposes not only for leisure or business. Which is my own opinion for this matter.
