

Some people believe that we have too many choices.

To what extent do you agree or disagree with this statement.

Many believe that today individuals are surrounded by an abundance of options. I completely agree with this in reasons for the advanced technologies and market competition.

The competition between different markets leads to consumers overwhelmed with ~~the-an~~ array of potential choices. For example, in this modern society cellphone buyers face a wide range of devices and prices among various companies. There are so many companies such as Apple, Samsung, and Sony, which ~~they~~ let consumers have the freedom to make correct comparison and ~~they~~ are not being dominated by one market as it can be profitable for them because ~~they-these companies~~ cater for every possible consumer preference and for ~~surviving-saving~~ themselves amidst competition have to provide better goods. This emulation is not only relating to a commodity market, but it also happens in other fields, for instance, education and healthcare.

In addition, the development of technologies has led to a dramatic expansion in the numbers of choices that are attainable. For example, the internet has ~~made-itbrought~~ easier access to any information. It is a valuable research tool providing information which may help people ~~making-make~~ a better decision. For example, it is a complex task for students to find an appropriate university that suits their circumstances such as a financial one. they can spur an online search to offer the best choice and also helps them ~~in-finding~~ the better-best one. The internet may have a great influence on people's decisions. it is a double-edged sword. for instance, about those who are obsessed, the positive sides of this diversity of choices are eclipsed by its negative aspects because they ~~imagine-are~~ spoilt for choices ~~and-itwhich~~ may lead to dissatisfaction, self-blame as well as regret.

In conclusion, it is undeniable that in this fast-paced world most of the communities encounter a dramatic number of options s in many aspects of their lives. It depends on anyone's personality as to how great they can benefit from this diversity.
