

Some people think that the ideal parents are strict disciplinarians who keep their children on the straight and narrow path with firm yet loving control. Others argue that ideal parents form loving bonds with their children through a relationship closer to friendship and a less authoritarian approach.

Write a response in which you discuss which viewpoint more closely aligns with your own position and explain your reasoning for the position you take. You should address both of the views presented in developing and supporting your position.

What-who is the-an ideal parents? The measurement of an ideal parents is outcome of their children. Simply put, how the youth will behave in the-society is the best way to elaborate the quality of a successful parents. As it is obvious, an infant is an amorphous soul which can be shaped during the time that it spends in its family. The didactic ways that parents choose to bring up their child with, is the answer to our question.

Although some people believe that the strict disciplines breed better children, I, personally, think that the more strict the rules, the better lie-liars the youth. Each individual tends to experience a majority of things-emotions in his/her life which are pernicious, like sadness, heartbroken-heartbreak, etc. The strict parents try to circumscribe the possibilities of deafit-defeat in the life of their children in order to preserve them from getting hurt. Considering that children are eager to know everything by theirselves-themselves, the inevitable outcomes are either a depression-depressed child who is afraid to be a maverick or a perfect lair who knows the best way to circumvent his / her duty.

There is a series by Netflix which shows the future of technology, in one of the episodes, a single mother tried to eliminate the violence, andpronography pornography, etc. from the sight of her daughter by putting a chip in her brain. The result was a girl who asks her classmate to tell the story of movies with the scenes that she cannot see.

I am of the opinion that an-ideal parents will be a closed friend with their children, and help them to choose their way under the circumstance which they expound for them. They let them to-experience, to-lose, to-win and to-taste the result of bad decisions. I assert this is the only way to educated the next generation.

Considering the points discussed above, the most rational conclusion which can be drawn, is that by a friendship-friendly supervision the ideal parents can culminate-help their children to be successful in their future life. The strict orders and limitation-limiting atmosphere will ruin the creativity of the children and hurt them in their forth-coming life.
