

In the past. When students did a university degree, they tended to study in their own country.

Nowdays, they have more opprtunities to study abroad.

What are the advantages and dis advantages of this development?

You should use your own ideas, knowledge and experience and support your arguments with examples and relevant evidence.

In the present century, learning is no longer confined to classrooms, but happens in various sircumantances integrated with diverse cultures and languages where people meet and also communicate with each other to acquire information. The best apprtunity to fulfill this demand can be provided by universal esucation.

Generally, the youth of today are more willing to continue their education in other developed counteris to grab exellent chances of the life, particularly those belonging in developing ones. Moreover, what usually draws their interest to studying overseas is finding professionals expanding their knowledge in practical experimentsexperiences, so ~~the~~ career development is one of their primary purposes. On the other hand, learners educating-studying in a foreign country are more bound to boost their confidence as well as their sense of self-reliance when they must encounter many issues and challenges while living alone. Also, instead of merely picking facts up from books and the Internet, there should be more possibility of navigating and exploring local cultures, history and new languages of different heritage.

However, there might be some trouble that needs to be overcome by students in foreign partslands. At first, it is possible that they may not only face either culture shocked or language barriers and find it difficult to-developing new friendships, but also become homesick and missed their family. Therefore, in preference to concentrating on their study, they should be worried about caring for themselves especially when the financial assistance from their family is limited and they have to be able to afford the prohibitive costs of living abroad. For instance, many students abandoned their education at abroad at a cost of wasting their valuable time in their youth due to enormous difficulties that they had experienced in a short-term of their immigration.

In conclusion, people by studying abroad can achieve many benefits in terms of academic abilities and living skills, although the drawbacks could be tackled although, when a positive attitude of promising opportunities in the future outweighs the negative ones.