

Many people believe that women make better parents than men and that this is why they have the greater role in raising children in most societies. Others claim that men are just as good as women at parenting.

To perfectly rear a child, various factors are involved ~~in~~. Fathers and mothers, in this regard, as they are normally ~~seen~~ the very first ~~identity~~ identities seen by children who play an undeniably effective role in raising them. Although some people believe that both may be as important as each other / equally important, I would argue that women are found more fitting for nurturing ~~human beings~~ offspring. My reasons will be discussed in the following paragraphs.

Firstly, young girls are implicitly taught by their mothers' or grandmothers' nurturing behavior which is mirrored in the games played by them in their childhood. In contrast, entertaining activities appealing to boys are greatly found more violent and warlike which seem to be like anything but making tea or taking care of dolls. Consequently, this history proves the idea of women being better parents in comparison with their opposite sex counterparts. Growing up ~~with~~ in the mentioned situation, females, at first, unconsciously practice raising a child which might be later repeated with their younger siblings inasmuch as they are considered really experienced individuals, being perfect for training roles.

Secondly, innate women's features are extremely taken into account as very essential and influential ones to raise a child which are weaker in men. For instance, self-control is one of the very first vital characteristics in this matter. That you ~~to~~ keep saying one thing for more than one time to be fully and correctly understood requires endless patience which is the males' prominent trait. If you lose your temper easily, you will never be able to make good parents. In addition, to be excellently trained and treated, children are in a great need of smooth communication's skills by which they get capable of being understood as well as understand in the best way. Besides, apparently spending more time with children, mothers must be able to establish stronger ties with their babies.

On the other hand, it is worth mentioning that when it comes to unusual and unprecedented situations where mothers are not available, not only are fathers able to raise a child to the best of their ability, but they could be sometimes far better than women.

By way of conclusion, according to intrinsic characteristics and all external factors surrounding girls, they are highly considered better ~~!!!/superir~~ parents in comparison with ~~their~~ husbands boys.
