

Do you agree or disagree with the following statement? Your job has more effect on your happiness than your social life does.

Reaching ~~to~~-adulthood has always been challenging as individuals have to deal with life demands. Having a successful career, making meaningful relationships, and following a healthy life style are the factors that directly affect one's happiness. While some believe that one's social life has more influence on their feeling of joy, I believe that the credit goes to the person's career, because ~~the~~-job security leaves daily stresses away, high social status brings more satisfaction and others set an example of a person's achievements which can be rewarding.

First of all, what makes people feel more relaxed is by having the assurance that they are not supposed to lose their job easily. The more a person has job security, the better he/she can perform their duties. When individuals' working atmosphere is soothing, without any threat of losing their job, a better performance and a more lively personality is probable. Furthermore, not only are they happy with their situation, but also they can overcome hardships more easily, which can eventually bring them more satisfaction and joy. Therefore, having ~~a~~ job security, which makes individuals pleased, can boost~~s~~ their productivity in many ways.

Moreover, although some people have complacency in their work life, for some, ~~a~~ career advancement leading them to a higher social status is a goal. Those with better positions gain a lot of confidence, which can be beneficial for their mental health and specifically their inner mood. Receiving compliments from important members in the workplace could act as an incentive to make every effort to show their true potential. This process gives individuals a great sense of happiness that nothing cannot take its place. As a result, positive reinforcements in working conditions lead~~s~~ to higher perseverance and more satisfaction.

Finally, for some, ~~drawing other's-others'~~ attention toward their achievements is so pleasing. Many individuals like to be recognized by their colleagues, trying hard to leave a good impression on important figures. This can be rewarding as they realize that everyone knows their deeds and admire~~s~~ them. There are even some people who try to imitate their actions. ~~Since-when~~ one considers ~~himselfoneself/herself~~ a successful character in ~~their-one's~~ career, ~~their-one's~~ life is filled with happiness. As a consequence, those with bright accomplishments become a role model for other members.

To sum up, I believe that one's job has higher influence on happiness ~~that~~-~~than does~~ their social life-~~does~~. I suggest that individuals pay more attention to~~ward~~-strengthening the skills related to their jobs because in this way there will be a productive-~~member~~, ~~a~~ hard-working person and a role model for others.
