

Do you agree or disagree with the following statement? It is better for the younger people to take risk and explore new things than the older people.

It is crystal clear that taking risks has two contradictory points which ~~are~~ failure or success. By considering both sides we will have pleasant results. In my belief the youth should take risks more than older ones and some reasons persuade me to put forward this viewpoint which I will explain with a couple of example.

At the outset, people are more flexible when they are young which means young people can be more adapted ~~with~~ to new conditions ~~rather~~ than older individuals. For instance, migration is one of the most risky issues which young individuals can better handle themselves with a new situation and cope with their problems because they have more energy and they are fresh, can work hard and also think positively compered to older ones.

Another noteworthy point is that youths have more opportunities to compensate their failures. It is a given fact that sometimes taking risks ~~encounter~~ renders you with/results in various failures, so young individuals have more time to rectify their mistakes because their life expectancy ~~are~~ is higher than older people's/that of older people. For example, most young businessmen return to business with more experiences after their first bankruptcy.

Last but not least, by taking risks youths can gain diverse experiences which is conducive to ~~create~~ creating a new better ~~off~~ life but older people did not have sufficient time to create a new life. For instance, the youthful may try several job chances to find out which one can be more beneficial. Although it takes some years to find the best way, they will find out the most efficient way at the end.

To recap, older people's less flexibility and energy, as well as life expectancy and short-term opportunities will keep them away/steer them clear of/blow ~~they~~ them away from taking risks, so it can be more practical for youths to take risks in the best way and they should use older individuals' experiences to reduce damage.
