Nowadays, parents are looking for their children's inborn skills to improve their abilities. It is accepted that if children have special talents in the art or sports they have more chances to success. The contentious issue is ~~that~~ to what extent we can rely on hard work and teaching to become proficient sportsman or artists without any special genius.

On the one hand we know about the people who were proficient in their majors because of their special talents such as Beethoven, Shakespeare as well as Maradona who are famous in art and sport. Children have their own skills and if parents improve these talents, they can be successful in their life. That is why, some institutes are working ~~in-on~~ thorough aptitude tests of children's characters in order to not only find ~~ing~~ their capabilities, but also help them flourish ~~them~~.

On the other hand, talents are like seeds which need to be cultivated in order to yield and if one is not willing to put in the work to harvest their talent, then the gifts ~~itself themselves~~ are essentially useless. Having special talents, football superstars ~~are improved~~ their ability by striving and exhausting exercises. For example the students who are registered in music school because of their aptitude, exercise and learn under the high quality of learning criteria to become a professional musician. That's why some groups believe though having inborn skills are useful and important, ~~but~~ hard working and proper learning are essential and can reimburse-compensate lack of talents among the children.

To my mind, although combination of talent and hard work going hand in hand ~~it~~ will provide better results, ~~but~~ people can overcome their lack of inborn skills by hard perseverance; conversely, talents without ~~hone-honing your skills are~~ is futile and cannot result in success.
