

Do you agree or disagree with the following statement?

People today spend too much time on personal enjoyment—doing things they like to do rather than doing things they should do.

One of today's controversial issues is whether people allocate most of their time to personal enjoyment or their duties. The growth of technology in the 21st century has a noticeable impact on ~~the-an~~ individual's lifestyle and many deem that the availability of innumerable and far-reaching high-tech instruments leads to ~~increasing-increase in the availability of the-~~entertainment. However, others do not accede to this way of thinking and suppose that these ~~appliances-tools~~ are means of helping people to have their best performance. I personally admire the latter viewpoint and in the following, I will explore my reasons.

To start out with, careers, companies and businesses are becoming more and more specialized in comparison to 20 years back. The technology is overstepping the boundaries of humans' knowledge and surging with a fast pace and you should parallel upgrade your information if you want to be prosperous. Therefore, the governments and societies encourage people to work harder. On the other hand, the competition in the industrial world necessitates s the high-qualified employees. In a small dimension within the borders of a country as a domestic company or even in the international arena, several companies have a tournament to reach the best position and become the first brand in the world. This achievement is impossible if people and ~~stuffs-staffs~~ of that companies allot most of their times s to avocation. As an example, when we compare two of the most important companies in the field of the cell phone, Samsung and iPhone, it can be inferred that they utilize the up-to-date knowledge in order to present the qualified products s and take over ~~its-their~~ rivals. Thriving becomes more intricate and requires more efforts.

Secondly, although these days the application of a variety of forms of technologies such as cell phones, TV and laptops is more prevalent than before, they are not just a means of enjoyment. I deeply believe that most of the time people exploit their phones in order to gain self-improvement rather than as a sheer hobby and no instrument could promote the careers, education and knowledge as cell phones. You can follow news, read books, ~~enrollment-enroll in~~ the new online courses and even manage your business via the internet and social media such as Instagram or YouTube. Teleworking is one of the ~~phenomenon-phenomena~~ of the current century and when you work online, you work actually more than 8-eight hours a day and hardly have any time left to relax.

In sum, I firmly believe that people do not spend the majority of their time on personal enjoyment. The invention of new equipment gives s them an opportunity to perform their responsibilities much better than before.
