Nowadays, owing to fast growth in a number of national economies, having especial potential such as huge revenues which ~~are resulted~~ result from fossil fuels, businesses have boomed and government's revenues have risen/are increased. Because of that conspicuous income, the governments start to invest in cities which in turn cause inhabitants' welfare and sometimes rural areas will be forgotten.

Although economic development seems like a reasonable achievement for countries, the unfair distribution of revenue can cause negative effects. Governments, having a high- pace development in their ~~economic~~ economy, focus ~~to on improve~~ improving life situation in cities and invest in infrastructures of the cities such as building sport complexes, developing public transportation as well as ~~programing~~ planning to improve health care situations while the rural areas might be forgotten.

As a result of the above mentioned neglect, the countryside ~~are is~~ not suitable and attractive place for living of people especially for the young people who are looking for better life. Because they ~~do not have~~ not enough facilities for learning or starting business in comparison with ~~the people who are~~ those living in big cities, as a result, they will immigrate ~~to cities~~. ~~Genocides~~ crime and poverty are the direct results of this exodus. They cannot find a ~~money maker~~ money making job and that ensues from ~~have~~ having not sufficient skill ~~and which~~ leads them to poor life and crimes.

Governments have to take ~~adopt a~~ proper strategies to alleviate those problems such as investing some amounts of their raised revenue in the countryside and increase their living standard. Decreasing the unemployment, preparing suitable facilities for health and education are some of the necessary actions that they can do to reduce ~~minimize/mitigate this~~ these problems.

All summed up, if the governments who have rapid economic development cannot fairly manage and distribute the facilities in all regions of the country and among their citizenship they will be faced with many social problems.
