

Do you agree or disagree with the following statement?

People who develop many skills are more successful than people who focus on one skill only. Use specific reasons and examples to support your answer.

It is stating the obvious that success has several meanings for each person and it depends on each ~~individuals'~~individual's situation. That has been ~~consider~~questioned, whether people who have various skills are more prosperous or others who focus on one skill only, which has always been a much debated argument. Despite the argument asserting that people who focus on one task are more successful based on having a high concentration on their works, I believe otherwise on the grounds that a person who learns different tasks ~~are~~is more creative and flexible ~~to~~in several careers than others which is conducive to being more successful.

First and more obvious, the crux of the matter lies in the fact that people who develop various skills are more productive. In simple terms, being more productive gives more chance to a person to become more creative. The best example ~~is~~is, a worker in a company who knows numerous skills. He is able to work in different parts of that company and as a result, is a more productive and highly-respected worker in that company. Besides, since he knows several tasks he gains more experiences in different fields which ~~is~~culminates in fixing better problems ~~it~~in terms of being a creative and experienced person. Therefore, it goes without saying that a person who learns more than one task has ~~a~~ more opportunity to become a productive and creative person, thereby ~~copping~~coping better with difficulties which may ~~he may face on the way to success~~be face in the success way.

Another striking point is that people with several abilities are more likely to flexibly develop their careers. To put apposite words, fundamentally they have more opportunity to find jobs compared to people who focus on one ability. For the purpose of illustration, a person who graduated from electrical engineering and knows mechanics and is also fluent in English and French not only has ~~he~~ more chances to find several jobs but also he may ~~has~~have more salary than others. Hence, as is clear, individuals with diverse skills are ~~more~~better able to flexibly develop their careers whereby having ~~a~~more ~~better~~ chance to choose their career as much as possible.

To cut a long story short, although some people believe that individuals who focus on one skill are more successful in terms of concentration, people with various skills are more creative and productive ~~person~~individuals and also they have more opportunity to find more jobs which will be more beneficial during their life.
