

College ~~freshman~~freshmen do not know much about college life and study. There are two ways to help freshman get into college life quickly. Choose a method which you feel is better and explain why.

1. The school holds a week of experience or orientation program, which can be felt in advance
2. Exchange experience and get information from senior schoolmates of this major

It is absolutely undeniable that college has a significant role ~~on~~in children's life. That has been questioned; whether an orientation program is beneficial for freshman or getting information from seniors which has always been a much debated argument. Despite the arguments asserting that offering a week orientation plan is more useful for pupils, I believe otherwise on the grounds that exchanging experience from seniors will be more practical in terms of saving time and meeting new people.

First and more obvious, the crux of the matter lies in fact that; preparing orientation is time-consuming. In simple terms, students who are ~~freshman~~freshmen do not have a lot of time and by holding a week experience they waste plenty of time. The best example, a person who is a freshman ~~in~~in abroad should spend a lot of time ~~for~~for being familiar with the town and ~~knows~~knowing public transportation which reaches ~~to the~~to the college. Therefore, it goes without saying that offering an orientation program wastes plenty of pupils' time ~~whereby~~thereby preventing them from undertaking essential tasks.

Another merit of this argument is best reflected in the fact that getting data from seniors is conducive to meeting new people. To put it into apposite words, fundamentally by exchanging experience from other people, freshman can ~~making~~make new friends which will be more practical for their social life. ~~As an~~in the example ~~which~~ abovementioned, that person needs to get in touch with new people from that town which culminates in feeling homesick rarely. Hence, as is clear, asking new data and gaining diverse experiences from seniors are more productive for ~~freshman~~freshmen, thereby finding novel friends.

To cut a long story short, although some people believe that holding an orientation has more benefits for pupils, I strongly believe that this mind-set is nothing but a tunnel-vision that ignores the importance of wasting students' time and prevents students ~~of~~from getting in touch with new people who~~which~~ are ~~notable~~ notably inseparable parts of each person's life.
