

Some countries have laws that prohibit animals being used in circuses or other forms of entertainment because it is cruel to keep animals in an environment that can cause them stress.

Should all countries have laws to prevent animals being used in circuses and similar forms of entertainment?

There are some rules and regulations which forbid countries from holding circuses with animals. Although there are certainly valid arguments to the contrary, I personally, opine that in terms of animal rights this kind of entertainments should be banned in all societies.

Training a wild beast to follow ~~up~~ some movements mostly requires punishments rather than reward-based pieces of training. Perhaps the main issue encountered by circuses is animals with different natures kept in the same conditions due to expensive requirements to build up a proper place to meet the welfare needs on animals.

However, some proponents believe that while performing in shows, animals do not suffer stress during healthy performance, training, or transportation, and it is possible to run circuses without harming ~~animalsthem~~. But the lifestyle that ~~forced~~ forces animals to live in close contact with humans creates untold stresses on brutes which is far from what their natural environment would be.

By and large, there is no doubt that ~~during while~~ training animals, ~~they~~ trainers would often overwork and, ~~beaten~~ them until they are willing to submit, and are forced to live in confined conditions.
