

Some people think that parents should teach children how to be good members of society. Others, however, believe that school is the place to learn this.

Discuss both these views and your own opinion.

Here is a question "who is responsible to teach children to be a good person in the community?" Some claim it should be ~~an~~ the education system, while others say their parents. This essay discusses both sides and lastly I will share my own point of view.

To begin with, the majority of parents have a crucial role in their ~~childrens'~~ children's lives and there are many studies ~~proven~~ proving that children imitate their parents. Additionally, we witness these days, a large number of individuals tend to continue their own family business or choose their parents' careers. To expand further, it is parents' duty to demonstrate to their children how to behave well as a human being, since they have a considerable impact on their children's behavior.

From another perspective, schools should be responsible to provide children with fundamental ethical instructions in order to bring them up with the sense of humanity. Unfortunately, there are many children who are deprived of a supportive environment, this is very important especially because these days many parents do not have enough time to spend with their children. Furthermore in schools children have the chance to interact with their peers in small communities, and learn how to react in an appropriate way toward others as a person in different situations.

In my opinion, as the two of the aforementioned factors ~~are having~~ have a considerable impact on children both of them ~~has~~ have equal responsibility in this. If I want to define "who is a good member of society" I think, is someone who cares about their children or students to teach them how they can build a better future as a person in society.

To sum up, although the education system is responsible for teaching individuals how to behave well (contribute meaningfully) as a person in communities, parents also have their own role in this.