Despite all campaigns all around the world to combat poverty, statistics prove that we are yet to eradicate it completely. Many a factor contributes to destitution and this pressing issue requires international cooperation to be eradicated/eliminated.

Reasons behind the global poverty are manifold. To start with, lack of education hurts children's development and, in turn, prevents them from securing jobs with stable income in the future. In spite of global schemes to combat illiteracy, it still exists all across the globe leading to unemployment, which in turn combined with ~~Unemployment and~~ illiteracy create a vicious circle which will make futures breadwinners disturbed/perturbed ~~bend over backwards~~. Moreover, many people are condemned to a life of poverty since their state is debilitated by inefficiency and corruption. Their countries governed by corrupted officials who prefer their individual benefits over taking steps to bridge the gap between the poor and rich. In addition, that most of the world's wealth is distributed among a small group of people is an undeniable fact. That is to say, people who live in unfavorable geographical areas which are subjected to natural disasters need help of developed countries in order to survive.

Many measures could be taken to eradicate destitution. Firstly, governments should make providing free education for all citizens a priority since without technical qualification there would not be any jobs for prospective employers-employees rather than menial ones with meagre salaries. For example, allocating money to building state schools or offering scholarships to poverty-stricken children, the government could help them to enter the workforce and maintain their standards of living in the future. Secondly, the state should provide jobs for all citizens in order to help them make money by their own devices and turn the economic wheels. Thirdly, the combat against poverty cannot be left on the states and federals alone. It requires a concerted effort with the supervision of the united-United nation- Nations and NGOs in order to take initiatives and viable solutions to distribute the countries' revenue amongst all people and provide a safety net for the less fortunate.

In conclusion, many factors such as geographical and political ones lead to global poverty but there are many measures that could be taken by officials to tackle destitution.
