

Some people believe that children should be allowed to stay at home and play until they are six or seven years old. others believe that it is important for young children to go to school as soon as possible. what do you think are the advantages of attending school at a young age?

Whilst an overwhelming majority of the public hold the idea that it is all to the good of young children to spend their time playing before school age, others argue that the sooner children go to educational centers, the better for their future. When it comes to training children at early ages, I opine that though difficult it might seem at first, starting teaching children at early ages can bring about myriads of benefits for both the children and society if these trainings can be conducted according to the recommended guidelines by training experts.

We live in a world where education and practical skills play a crucial role in our career and other aspects of life, and without a shadow of a doubt there are some skills such as foreign languages, playing a musical instrument, or sports that requires practicing them at a young age. Many a person ~~who~~ starts learning a foreign language in their adulthood, but regrettably a majority of them are unable to make the most of it only because they have not started it at their childhood.

Having said that, we should also take children's demands into consideration. In other words, if tough educational materials replace their natural demands such as simple plays that every normal child requires, undoubtedly they will not lead a healthy life in their adulthood. Spending time with their same age children playing, children can develop their talent, and at the same time show their parents in what field they are gifted.

To cut a long story short, in my heart of hearts I agree with educating children at an early age, but without any pressure or tough method. In other words, there should be some selected subjects to teach them so that we can evaluate their talent in a way that they do not recognize they are obliged to learn, but they feel the pleasure of learning.
