

Children have more and more tests and exams at school, sometimes starting from the age of five or six right up until the age of 18. What are the advantages and disadvantages of making children do exams?

Nowadays, children who have started learning in schools are faced with examinations and testing since they are 5 or 6 years old. I believe the benefits of school's exams outweigh the drawbacks.

On the one hand, tests and exams can force children to practice and study hard in order to learn and improve their lessons. Children not only have to work tough-relentlessly to qualify in their exams and pass the courses but also they are obliged/forced to understand what they are taught by teachers. Moreover, they parents can be informed regarding their children- learning progress by feedbacks of those tests. Fathers and mothers want to know about the learning situation of their boys and girls and find to what extent their schools and teachers are successful in their works.

On the other hand, tests and exams increase stress among children especially for those whowhom are studying in primary schools. Most of the pupils are worried about the results of their exams and this stress is dangerous in their ages because they have not enough abilities to overcome their stress. However, if the teachers and parents give consultation to students about what is the purpose of the test, they can better deal with mental pressures of exams.

In conclusion, although test and exam increases stress among students, parents and teachers can teach to-students howwho to deal with that. Furthermore, school examinations force children to study hard and learn curriculums as well as it-prepare-preparing a proper feedback for parents about their childrens' progress.
